Meet the city's young ice-cream makers

The next time you venture into Koregaon Park and spot three 14-year-old kids selling ice-cream, don't be surprised. Theirs is an indigenous business venture. Tanya Nangpal, Simran Jadhav and Aniya Mhalas, the owners of the ice-cream cart Iconic, have implemented what many of us only dream about—a business plan.

Tanya, the co-owner of the cart, says, "We wanted our ice creams to be different and iconic. Hence the name." The idea of starting an ice cream cart had taken birth in their minds when the youngsters were in class VI. "We wanted to sell liquid nitrogen ice-cream then, but considering the risks, our parents advised against it," shares Tanya. They dropped the plan but a few years later, the trio now sells freshly made ice-cream rolls. Aniya says, "The ice-creams come in unique flavours like bubble gum, black rum, unicorn, classic C&C, Galaxy and many more!"

From selecting machines to finalising the cart design and deciding on the flavours, the three young ladies have put their heart and soul into this venture. Of course, they got some support from their parents too. Aniya adds, "We made a presentation and pitched the idea to our parents.

They were convinced and agreed to invest in our new venture. A lot of people did not believe that we could do something like this since we were just 14. But our parents believed in us and their support gave us a major boost."

Simran adds, "We feel delighted to see crowds at our ice-cream cart. It gives us a sense of satisfaction and motivation to work harder." Sundhi Rathore, a regular at the cart, shares, "They have unique and interesting flavours and I love coming here." Shivali Jasuja, another regular, says, "These girls are my role models! They have worked hard to achieve this at such a young age. Moreover, they have new flavours every week and the ice-creams are yummy!"
